

Search Site More Search Options/Archives

Search Tips

INSIDER Edition

The page you requested is only available to INSIDER Edition subscribers

India creates database to halt theft of lore

Associated Press

Monday, December 26, 2005, Page B5

For thousands of years, Indian villagers have used an extract from seeds of the neem tree as an insecticide. So when a U.S. company patented a process for producing the substance in 1994, India reacted with outrage.

The full text of this article has 617 words.

Want to access this page? Begin below.

Do you have a username and password on globeandmail.com? Please login.

Login Here

If you're already registered or subscribed, please login below:

Username:

Password:

Login

Forgot Your Username or Password?

☒ Remember me on this computer

Want to learn more about INSIDER Edition?

What is INSIDER Edition?

INSIDER Edition offers you premium access to key articles and features on globeandmail.com.

From the latest news and editorials, to unique tools and interactive content, you'll find the best of globeandmail.com inside INSIDER Edition. Take a tour to learn more .

Not registered with globeandmail.com?

Register now. It is quick and free.

Register Now >>>